

CONVICT BARRETT TO HANG JULY 14

Accused Took Stand in His Own Defence Monday Afternoon—Jury Out Only Few Minutes

"I sentence you, Garry H. Barrett, to be taken back to your penitentiary cell at the county jail there to remain until July 14, and then to be handed by the wack until you are dead."

With these words His Lordship Justice Harvey, at 7 o'clock, laid even-passed sentence upon Barrett, the first sentenced man in the history of justice for the cold-blooded murder of pity Warden Richard Siedman, on the charge of murdering the carter atop at the penitentiary.

The hearing of the evidence in the case was held before Judge J. A. Smith both counsel and the judge addressed each jury at length. The six jurors then filed out of the court room and the jury returned to the deliberation room with a verdict.

"Guilty," said the foreman, Walter Reed, in a free voice, I repeat the word "guilty" as the jury had decided upon, and the verdict ended upon.

"Guilty of murder," he repeated

Justice Harvey then dismissed the jury and turning to the prisoner said: "Garry R. Barrett, stand up." The prisoner rose from his crouching attitude in the dock, the focus of hundreds of eyes.

"The jury have found you guilty of murder," he continued, "and the lordship have you anything to say why the sentence of the court should not be deferred upon you."

"I have been imposed upon," said the accused in a firm voice. "My name was threatened."

"That is not said," remarked his lordship, "but the prisoner had relapsed to silence, 'that in view of the evidence before the court I agree with the verdict of the jury. I sentence you, Garry R. Barrett, to be taken back your cell in the penitentiary, there remain until July 14th, and then be taken to the gallows."

The crowd which packed every available space in the court room remained in breathless silence, every eye fastened upon the condemned man. Barrett received his sentence without a tremor and nodding his head slightly resumed his seat. The court was then adjourned and the prisoner

The jury, which found Barrett guilty of murder was composed of Walter G. (foreman), J. F. Findlay, E. (over), Stephen Ecker, Frank Pollard and John Murchison.

Defence Was Weak.
The crown had an almost perfect case against Barrett and the result of the trial was fully expected by all. The bar convicts and the carpenter in-

Warden Stedman. The accused himself acknowledged the act and attempted to justify it by a story of the riden Steedman because he had dis-ced the Masonic order. The cons called to give evidence for the ence gave scarcely any assistance was not at all conclusive and received the only possible chance of evidence that the accused was insane.
